Celebrating the 147th Anniversary of Edison's Menlo Park Laboratory

Known throughout the world as the 'Wizard of Menlo Park', Thomas Edison is the world's most famous inventor. More than any other inventor in history he is responsible for many technologies still enjoyed and highly valued in today's global societies. He innovated three major and fundamental industries—electric light and power, sound recording, and motion pictures—that remain central to modern life. By the time of his passing in 1931, Edison held 1,093 U.S. and 1,250 foreign patents in 34 countries across the globe.

Menlo Park - New Jersey, is where one-quarter of Edison's U.S. patents were developed and where he envisioned and built the world's first research and development facility. At this state-of-the-art laboratory Edison experienced an astonishing burst of genius and creativity. Edison and his team produced a series of major innovations, including the electric lamp and electrical system, the phonograph, and the carbon-button telephone transmitter...but his most important innovation at Menlo Park was one that could not be patented—his Research and Development Laboratory and his "team approach to invention"!

Last summer, the State of New Jersey, allocated $250,000 to the EMTC/Thomas Edison Center at Menlo Park to support our efforts to build a new museum to honor Thomas Edison's amazing work here. The iconic landmark light tower, listed on the National Register of Historic Places, remains the focal point of Menlo Park. Our current museum contains a wealth of precious items, including many original Edison artifacts.

The Thomas Edison Center at Menlo Park is committed to providing an enriched, interactive educational experience for all who come to visit, to learn, and be inspired by Thomas Edison's achievements. The new and larger museum will enable us to accommodate the high demand for educational programs for students and life-long learners. This site is deserving of a Center which can more appropriately honor the legacy of the 'Wizard of Menlo Park' and the Menlo Park Edison Pioneers. Help us create the future at Menlo Park!
